What you need to know about COMPASS training

With COMPASS’ initial implementation live as of August 7th and subsequent releases following in the near future, training will be of paramount importance to the project and the University of Florida community. You may be wondering: Do I need training? When will I be trained? What will my training look like? Who will be training me? Let’s answer those questions!

Read More

CollegeNET campus update

Coming this fall, the Office of Admissions will begin the process of implementing vendor-supported applications via CollegeNET, a recognized leader in the field of online applications. The new applications will replace all of the University of Florida’s homebuilt online applications as well as paper-based readmissions and post-bac applications. The impact to departments will be minimal as the applications will still be processed in the same manner. The only change for this upcoming cycle will be a better application experience for those applying to the university.

Read More
COMPASS in Progress

Years of planning and intensive efforts by project-oriented teams across the University of Florida campus led to the first major release of functionality Aug. 7, 2017, through COMPASS (Campus-wide Modernization Program to Advance Student Services). Other project highlights this month include:

Read More